Workshop

Manuscripts of Metaphysics and Philosophical Theology

9–10 September 2025

The workshop is the third of a series of annual workshops dedicated to the material expression of intellectual activity in different philosophical genres. It brings together a diverse group of scholars in different career levels who tackle the subject matter from different methodological approaches such as codicology, philology, historiography, and material analysis. The first two workshops focused on, respectively, manuscripts of logic and natural philosophy in medieval Greek, Arabic, Hebrew, and Latin linguistic domains. They proved productive with respect to the cross-pollination among scholars from different fields and who focus on different languages and periods, finding interesting (and sometimes surprising) connections and avenues for further collaboration. The current workshop will follow suit, this time—and in line with the traditional Aristotelian curriculum—focusing on metaphysics and philosophical theology in Greek, Arabic, Latin, and Hebrew.
